The 9/11 Attacks

This essay has a very long introduction that outlines the actual event. This isn't necessary. A short (3-4 sentences) introduction that states the event and outlines the basic causes and consequences is adequate. The place to write at length is in the main body paragraphs that describe the causes and consequences. In this essay there are a number of causes and consequences identified, but no description. Candidates must describe the causes by stating things such as what happened, where and when it happened, who was involved, and most importantly, in what way did it contribute to the cause of the historical event. This must be done for at least one cause and at least one consequence before the candidate can achieve the Standard. It is preferable for candidates to describe more than one cause and more than one consequence.
